1. 35 U.S.C. 101 reads as follows:

Whoever invents or discovers any new and useful process, machine, manufacture, or composition of matter, or any new and useful improvement thereof, may obtain a patent therefor, subject to the conditions and requirements of this title.

2. Claims 24-31 are again rejected under 35 U.S.C. 101 because the claimed invention is directed to non-statutory subject matter and the claimed invention lacks patentable utility.

Please be advised that the "Interim Guidelines for Examination of Patent Applications for Subject Matter Eligibility" was signed on Oct 26, 2005 and posted on the uspto.gov website. The link is:

<http://www.uspto.gov/web/offices/pac/dapp/ogsheets.html>

Also see updated MPEP 2106, which covers algorithm and computer implemented inventions and the manner in which they may be claimed and find statutory basis under 35 U.S.C. 101.

While the claims do not always positively and clearly recite and require any actual computer implementation, even if/when there were such claimed basis they would still fail to meet the latest Guidelines criteria for having statutory basis in any type (e.g. method, apparatus, medium, etc.) of claimed invention as the instant claims stand.

These claims fail to meet the minimal requirement of a useful, concrete and tangible result of a real physical world interactive end result supported by any algorithm steps, or structure supporting such calculated step with an end result, where the end result limitation/data supports the invention being used in a practical useful, concrete and tangible real world combination manner. As the above updated Guidelines now state, structure (e.g. input devices, sensors, databases, etc.) of any type that supply data for calculations (done by human and/or computer) do not make the claimed invention fall within statutory subject matter until there occurs explicitly a claiming of and meeting the actualization in the real world of a useful, concrete and tangible result.

Note that algorithmic based inventions, especially mathematical or abstract ideas based, where performed using a computer, such computerization still may not make an overall computerized system fall into permitted patentable statutory subject matter. The instant claims fail to explicitly and clearly set forth any end result physical world transformation of any data calculations so as to relate to the real world as/for a tangible practical use. The step(s) may still be at best just internal computer calculations absent any tangible real world relationship. External supply to other structural systems, to a user via display or printing, or some other practical tangible result with the clear useful purpose of such "output", must somehow be minimally claimed for establishing statutory subject matter.

Response to applicants' arguments:

Applicants merely argue that "Establishing the altitude of the mobile communication terminal ... is clearly a useful, concrete and tangible result." However, as claimed, and admitted by applicants' remark, this is only another calculation. Mere calculation results of arguably inventive algorithms that lack some physical transformation of the calculation as a practical use into the real world, or a useful, concrete and tangible result into the real physical world, remain under the current 101 statutory subject matter Guidelines as non-statutory subject matter.

3. Claims 1-23 stand allowed.

4. THIS ACTION IS MADE FINAL. Applicant is reminded of the extension of time policy as set forth in 37 CFR 1.136(a).

A shortened statutory period for reply to this final action is set to expire THREE MONTHS from the mailing date of this action. In the event a first reply is filed within TWO MONTHS of the mailing date of this final action and the advisory action is not mailed until after the end of the THREE-MONTH shortened statutory period, then the shortened statutory period will expire on the date the advisory action is mailed, and any extension fee pursuant to 37 CFR 1.136(a) will be calculated from the mailing date of the advisory action. In no event, however, will the statutory period for reply expire later than SIX MONTHS from the mailing date of this final action.
